The workshops are designed for early career researchers—advanced Masters students, PhDs and post-docs with limited publishing experience. The workshops can be adapted to meet the needs of different groups. If it is a limited number of people, I usually include breakout sessions where the participants grapple with ethics case studies. The sessions usually run between 1-2 hours depending upon size, structure and audience engagement.

Along with the topics below, we look closely at the publishing cycle, offer guidance on constructing titles and abstracts, managing the peer review process, handling critique, understanding the ethical issues that can arise in publishing, navigating the Open Access landscape as well as tips on promoting their work. Here is a link to the Author Workshop page which has more information (and a quote from me which was a surprise!): https://authorservices.taylorandfrancis.com/understanding-the-publishing-process-workshops-and-events/#

Here is my bio:
Victoria Babbit is the Editorial Director for EMEA with responsibility for the growth and development of a diverse portfolio of journals from the region. Victoria joined Taylor & Francis in 2008 and throughout the past decade has supported societies, editors and authors in the region as they navigate the rapidly changing publishing landscape. In collaboration with the library community and academic institutions, she is actively engaged in building capacity and ensuring publishing success through courses and workshops for early career researchers. Prior to joining Taylor & Francis, Victoria pursued a PhD in Geography, focusing on migration, at the University of Washington in Seattle.
